Tea History

Tea plants are native to East and South Asia, and probably originated around the meeting points of the lands of north Burma and southwest China. Since the 18th century the United Kingdom has been one of the largest tea consumers in the world, with average supply at 1.9 kg per person every year.

The popularity of tea occasioned the furtive export of slips, a small shoot for planting or twig for grafting to tea plants, from China to British India and its commercial culture there, beginning in 1840; British interests controlled tea production in the subcontinent. Tea, which was an upper-class drink in Europe, became the infusion of every class in Great Britain in the course of the 18th century and has remained so.

In Britain, the drinking of tea is so varied that it is quite hard to generalize. While it is usually served with milk, it is not uncommon to drink it black or with lemon, with sugar being a popular addition to any of the above. Strong tea served with milk (and usually one or two teaspoons of sugar) in a mug is commonly referred to as “builder’s tea”. Our hand-picked selection of Teas are supplied by Henrietta of Rare Tea Company.
